This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

The Syntax of XII and XIII century English has not as yet received adequate treatment. This partial neglect may possibly be due to the transitional state of the language at that period. It would, of course, be unfair to expect that a treatise dealing only with a limited series of texts of that period should provide a basis for the whole range of syntactical phenomena. Such a basis, however, will only be established when the entire body of such literary material has been severally subjected to the same analytical treatment as that which I have attempted in the following pages. In order to make my researches more useful I have followed Dr. Wülfing's arrangement, and, for the sake of conformity, it would, in my opinion, be very desirable for everyone dealing with similar researches to follow the plan adopted by so eminent a philologist and trustworthy a guide.

In the present work I have avoided drawing any conclusions whatsoever from the materials I have collected, feeling convinced that such cannot be drawn until a vast amount of still further material has been gathered and carefully collated: then, and then only, will it be possible to deduce infallible rules.

In favour of the system adopted by me, I might, however, gentle reader, call your attention to the fact that nowadays, in leading pedagogic circles in Germany, the so-called "Imitative Method" seems much in vogue; according to which only examples are given, with no rules or reasoning whatsoever, the learner being himself expected to draw the necessary conclusions.

This system has the following advantages: 1) of sharpening the pupil's intellect; 2) of rendering faulty deductions on the part of the author absolutely impossible; 3) of allowing the pupil's imagination unlimited play, and, consequently, rendering it possible for different readers to draw different inferences, which will necessarily throw clearer light on the subject than would be the case if they were confined to the often somewhat meagre and insufficient conclusions of the author himself. Now I see no reason why these arguments, which hold good in the realm of pedagogy, should not prove equally applicable in the higher sphere of scientific investigation; for, if the untrained intellect of the average dull-witted schoolboy, "creeping like snail unwillingly to school", to quote the immortal Swan of Avon (As You Like It, Act II, sc. 7), may be expected to build up a system of his own on the basis of a heterogeneous mass of crude and disparate examples, — how much more then will the subtle, University-trained minds of ripe and disciplined scholars — for only such will probably ever peruse and ponder over this little treatise of mine — be capable of drawing their own deductions.

I cannot lay down my pen without expressing my most heartfelt thanks to all those Universities whose excellent teaching has enabled me to advance minute scientific investigation, however limited may be the field I have endeavoured to cover. This honour, however, is chiefly due to the small but illustrious University of Rostock, which I may venture to call my second Alma Mater. Whilst deprecating for myself the honour of having made any new or original discoveries in the domain of philology, I may, I think, claim the merit, not altogether contemptible, of having, by unsparing diligence, contributed towards amassing some part of the material absolutely necessary for building up that splendid fabric — a house not made by hands but by minds — which will one day, I trust, be the crowning glory of the united efforts of all the humble gleaners in the field of philology.

In conclusion I wish to express my sincere thanks to my very erudite friend Dr. W. Fr. Harvey for his kindness in perusing my MS. and revising the proof-sheets.
